BREWING COMPANY OBTAINS DECISION

Foreign Corporation Tax Question In Supreme Court

An important decision was handed down this morning by the Supreme Court in the case of the Seattle Brewing and Malting Co. vs. Treasurer Campbell. The decision of the lower court is affirmed, the court holding that the phrase "its capital" does not mean all the capital of a foreign corporation.

The syllabus says: A statute which provides that no foreign corporation, with certain exceptions, "which does not invest and use its capital in this Territory," shall have an office in this Territory, unless it first pays a prescribed annual license fee, does not apply to a foreign corporation engaged in selling beer in the Territory which in good faith invests a substantial amount of its capital in the Territory in land, buildings, bottling plant, stock of beer, etc.

The suit was an action to recover two annual license fees and penalties for delinquencies, amounting in all to $750, paid under protest by the plaintiff to the defendant upon the latter's demand and was decided in favor of the plaintiff in the lower court. A similar case was decided in favor of the Pacific Oil Transportation Company a few days ago by Judge De Bolt.

TWELVE-YEAR OLD ROSE HART IS A PRISONER

Leading an idle and Dissolute Life, That's a pretty formidable charge to be placed against a little girl only twelve years of age. Evidently she didn't know what it meant, as she sat on a chair in Judge Whitney's chambers and swung her bare feet, a half puzzled, half roguish look on her face. She was such a little girl and the charge was such a big one.

Rose Hart is her name. She was seated at her desk in school yesterday when a big man came along and took her away to the police station. There were thieves and burglars there, and men who had tried to kill other men, and there were one or two crazy men there, babbling foolishness and doing things that would make even a full grown man feel unpleasant sensations as he watched them. But Rose didn't know anything about such things. She was only a little girl, you see.

After a while they took her up to the judge. She sat in a big chair in his chambers, barelegged, bareheaded, wriggling her toes in embarrassment and smiling her funny little smile. She has a little pug nose and merry eyes ready to laugh when there is anything to laugh at. And there is so much that is amusing to a little girl confronted with the stern dignity of the law.

Rose hadn't done anything bad. Not even P. W. Rider, superintendent of the Kakaako mission, who made the complaint, would say that she had. But her father is good for nothing, they say,—drunken much of the time, and the two of them have only one room to live in. He didn't take care of her as a little girl ought to be taken care of.

Judge Whitney didn't frighten Rose in fact, she doesn't look as if she could be frightened by a man who looks no sterner than Judge Whitney. She merely smiled an embarrassed little smile as she answered his questions. Yes, she had some other clothes besides the little blue dress she had on, but there were "in starch,—not ironed." She would have to get them, and her school books, before she would be ready to go to the Girls' Industrial School, where she was to be sent.

The judge sent her there because there is no other place to send little girls who have no one to look after them. They don't call it a prison, but little girls don't go there because they want to; they go because they are sent. And they can't get away after they go there. There are big doors and strong locks, and little girls have to do all sorts of things they don't like to. And there isn't anybody there who cares anything about them. No, of course, it isn't a prison. And perhaps Rose will be reformed when she comes out six years from now.

Today Judge Whitney suspended the sentence of Rose Hart. He is very anxious to avoid sending her to a place where she is much more liable to be made worse than better, and is giving her another chance. If she only had some place to go so that there would be a real home for her!

Dora Lancaster and her alleged paramour, William Monroe, were given a hearing before U. S. Commissioner George Davis this morning and were remanded by him to appear before the Federal Grand Jury on Monday, December 3. They were held in $1000 and $1500 bonds respectively.

Professor Edward Perkins Clarke, the newly appointed principal of the Central New York Institution of Deaf Mutes, was led to make the profession of teaching the deaf his life's work owing to the fact that both his parents were deaf.

We could serve a soda concoction of the ordinary kind and make more money than we do from the kind we serve—Hobron's kind—but we prefer to maintain a reputation for giving the best—the kind that sparkles; not the tapwater sort.
